- 1. When Soviet citizens arrive in either Manchuria or Morth Korea, they report to the Soviet consulate and surrender their passports. In place of these each person receives a certificate of employment (Udostovereniye Lichnosti po Mestu Raboty) from the organization by which he is employed. These documents differ in appearance and in content: those for Soviet citizens from the USSR have red covers, those for former Russian emigres become Soviet citizens have grey covers, and those for locally born Soviets have black covers. Possession of the employment certificate permits any Soviet citizen to travel unhindered within his country of residence. ... ien traveling abroad, however, as between China and North Korea, the Soviet citizen reclaims his passport from the consulate and deposits it again with the consulate at his destination.
- Soviet citizens in Marbin and Tientsin had to receive permission from the local Soviet consulate and register at the consulate in order to leave the area. In addition they are required to obtain a clearance slip from the Soviet Citizens Association.* In order to obtain this clearance slip, Soviets wishing to leave the area must first obtain a note from the consulate for delivery to the Soviet Citizens Association. The Soviet Citizens Association, in turn, checks on the financial indebtedness of these persons, and requires them to secure two guarantors each before issuing them clearance slips. With these clearance slips, Soviet citizens may apply to the Chinese police for visas. The Chinese police do not require them to supply guaranters. It takes from two weeks to four months to obtain Chinese visas, and travelers must leave on the day they receive their visas.** It is easier to obtain the necessary papers to leave Tientsin than Harbin.
- 3. During train journeys, the tickets and Chinese visas are checked but not Soviet passports. Upon arrival at their destinations, Soviet citizens must register at the local consulates.

ઇ . c	Ivan Petrovich Zyukin, is ostensibly the chief of the Passport Division of the Soviet Consulate in Harbin. It is suspected that he is actually engaged in secret intelligence work as a representative of the LVD or IGB because the confines his work to unusual cases of people leaving the city, changing citizenship, etc. It is also rumored that the chief of police, CHUANG, reports to him. CHUANG is said to have come from Hoscow, and knows Russian, but does not speak it in public. Zyukin is scheduled for transfer to Tientsin by February 1951 to become vice consul.	25
